BRUSSELS — European leaders said Tuesday that they were "deeply disturbed by the continued lack of progress" toward peace in the progress" toward peace in the Middle East and called for the urgent withdrawal of all foreign forces as a prelude to resuming negotiations for a comprehensive peace accord.

The European Community's 10 heads of government concluded a two-day summit here by exhorting the Palestine Liberation Organization to "seize the present opportunity" and endorse the idea of peace negotiations. At the same time, they denounced Israeli settlements on the West Bank as "a major and growing obstacle" to peace efforts and insisted that Israel refrain "from enlarging existing settle-ments or creating new ones."

Herzog Is Elected Israel's President In Defeat for Begin

Washington Past Service
JERUSALEM — Chaim Herzog. the Labor Party candidate, was the Labor Party candidate, was elected president of Israel on Tuesday in a personal setback for Prime Minister Menachem Begin, whose nominee for the largely ceremonial post was spurned in the Knesset for the second time in five years.

Mr. Herzog's surprise victory, by a secret vote of 61-57, came after Mr. Begin had worked strenuously to wrest the presidency from the to wrest the presidency from the Labor Party. Because Mr. Regin's Likud grouping has a majority in the Knesset, the vote meant that some coalition members in the pariament had defected.

The vote will undoubtedly boost the opposition's morale, but it re-mained unclear whether it will have any lasting political conse-quences for Mr. Begin's govern-

At a news conference after his election, Mr. Herzog said he did not believe his victory represented a threat to the Begin government. He also pledged to work for unity within the country and to raise Israci's standing abroad. Mr. Herzog, 64, a Labor member of the Knesset, is a former chief of

Mr. Herzog will begin his five-year term in May, succeeding Pres-ident Yitzhak Navon, who announced in February that he was leaving the presidency. There has been speculation that Mr. Navon, a popular figure in Israel, will eventually return to politics and seek the leadership of the Labor Party.

The president of Israel has no vernmental authority and serves largely a symbolic role. By tradition, he is expected to detach himself from politics. This factor has Navon could unite the Labor Party behind him.
Mr. Herzog's election was all the more embarrassing for Mr. Begin because he openly sought to avoid a repetition of the 1978 election for president. In that contest, Yitzhak Chavet, the government-sponsored candidate and an obscure professor of nuclear physics, withdrew short-ly before the election after a majority in the Knesset indicated that it preferred Mr. Navon.

Few among the steady flow of visitors knew that the eight great tapestries hung at eye level along the chapel's walls were the design of Raphael and had not hung there since 1527. In that year, the mercenaries of the army of Charles V, the Holy Roman emperor and king of Spain as Charles L captured Rome and put it to the sack. They took the tapestries and sold them separately to the highest bidders. Two of the total of 10, for instance, were bought by an Italian noblewoman. Pirates boarded a ship transporting them in the Mediterranean, and they next appeared on a Tunisian

There the hangings were bought by a Venetian nobleman. How they got to Constantinople, their next station, is not recorded. But there they were acquired by the Con-stable of Montmoreney, who in 1554 returned them to Pope Julius

Others of the series depicting ep-isodes from the byes of Sts. Peter and Paul had similar fates, but they were all reassembled in the Vatican before the 16th century was over. WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate, criticized by President Robbia Reagan, put aside a fight over the withholding of a 10-percent tax on interest and dividends to clear the way Tuesday for action on a $165. billion Social Security rescue bill and jobless benefits for 1.6 million

By 54-43, the Senate defeated a maneuver by Sen. John Meicher, Dem. ocrat of Montana, that would have kept alive the debate over his amendment, which would delay withholding six months, from July I to Jan. 1.

The vote delays the debate over withholding, probably until next month.

The Republican leadership warned that if the withholding amendment were attached to the Social Security bill, the bill would not be passed Vin to 1.6 million jobless people will run out of unemployment compensation unless Congress completes action on the bill before March 31.

Reagan Assails Banks? Campaign

WASHINGTON (WP) — President Ronald Reagan denounced the banking industry Tuesday for obstructing the Social Security package in an effort to repeal the interest and dividend withholding law. Robert J. Dole of Kansas, the Republican chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said after a meeting that Mr. Reagan, "in one of the rare times I've seen him really disgusted, threw down his glasses and said." he's had it up to his keister with the bankers in this country."

In a statement earlier Tuesday, the president said the $165-billion package to resone Social Security "cannot be permitted" to be delayed by the obstructionist tactics of a Washington lobby and its congression. al friends." The Senate is considering an amendment to delay imposing tax withholding on interest and dividends for six months; until Jan. I.

The Monetary Crisis That Common Market cliff-hanger last weekend concerned currency revaluations in Europe only, but the world's rittery financial markets could do without such shock waves. The battle, resolved for now, was essentially between France and West Germany, the dominant partners in the eight-nation monetary pact of 1979 that aims to fix the values of West European currencies in relationship to each other. There have been several revaluations, and this one was brought on by overstimulation of the French economy.

The Mitterrand government's unrealistic effort to pull France, by itself, out of the world's recession only made its currency weaker. West Germany aggravated the problem with its customary super-diligence in fighting inflation, making the mark yet stronger. Having already devalued the franc twice in 18 months, Mr. Mitterrand wanted the Germans to up-value the mark instead, at further expense to their exports and employment. In the end, both countries adjusted to the currency values suggested by the marketplace.

The lesson for Europe, and also for Americans who advocate fixed currency values, is that currencies can't hang together if economic policies hang separately. While it is too much to expect governments to cede much au-thority over policies that bear on the welfare of their peoples, any agreement to fix currency relationships requires basic coordination.

There are consequences beyond the Common Market currency zone, as well. The franc's devaluation will also reduce American exports to France, where all foreign goods now become more expensive.

And France may seek to balance its payments accounts by raising new import barriers, always more tempting than austerity measures. Such protectionism will be hard to shed and will tempt other nations to retaliate. As trade shrinks, everyone loses, just as the world is groping toward expansion.

The United States shares some of the blame. The Reagan administration engineered a recession that prolonged and deepened recession everywhere. And high American interest rates distorted most currency values by pulling foreign funds into dollar investments.

In this interactive world, only international collaboration and burden sharing can assure escape from common difficulties.

— THE NEW YORK TIMES.

An Eye on Exports

American exports have fallen over the past year, as is to be expected in a recession. But the pattern is instructive. Since demands for protection against imports are becoming a central issue in American politics, it is not a bad idea to keep an eye on the actual figures. The Commerce Department has just published the data for 1982, a panorama of U.S. economic relations with the rest of the world.

The striking thing about the drop in exports is the extent to which it is concentrated in only two countries — Canada and Mexico. The Canadian case is simply the mirror image of the U.S. recession. Mexico's situation is complicated hy its debts, the price of oil, and its devalued currency. But both are reminders that downturns in the United States have disproportionately severe consequences in the two countries that share its borders, and, as they buy less here, their troubles feed hack into our American factories.

But even in the midst of prolonged recession, the United States sold $211 hillion worth of goods abroad last year. That is four times the output of the American automobile industry. You have heard it said repeatedly that the American economy is becoming less competitive. Is it? A decade ago the United States exported about 4 percent of its gross national product. That proportion has nearly doubled since then, If American producers' ability to compete is declining, why have export sales been rising?

Competitiveness, hy the way, does not have much to do with industrial efficiency. It is largely a matter of exchange rates. The current trade disputes between the United States and Japan are a good example. While some of Japan's industries are world leaders, the productivity of the Japanese economy as a whole is slightly less than three-fourths the American level. That puts it a little ahead of Britain and Italy and well behind France and West Germany in national productivity.

But the Japanese are great savers with mon-ey to invest, while the United States has got its interest rates abnormally high. The stream of capital flowing from Japan into the United States depresses the yen and raises the value of the dollar in the exchange markets. That makes Japanese goods unusually cheap here, by American standards.

So American performance in the world economy is a good deal hetter than most of Congress seems to think. Where there are imhalances and trade quarrels, import quotas and tariffs will not help. The right remedy is cooperation among governments on monetary policy to correct the distorted currency exchange rates that exaggerated interest rates have produced.

— THE WASHINGTON POST.

The EMS Realignment

The European Monetary System arouses passion in few breasts, but the realignment agreement reached in Brussels, after a weekend of something approaching crisis, comes as a considerable relief, nonetheless. A failure to determine new values for the Deutsche mark and the franc might have had profound consequences, which would almost certainly not have been confined to the EMS. BEIRUT — The palace of the president of Lebanon, perched high in the mountains above Berrut, seems remote from life in this country. Then so does Amin Gemayel, the 42year-old lawyer who took over as president after the murder of his younger brother six months ago. Mr. Gemayel is a white-faced man, with cold good looks and a taste for electronic gadgets and abstract buzzwords like "package deal."

But precisely because he is so detached from messy politics, President Gemayel has been able to devise a plan for ridding Lebanon of occupying forces while simultaneously harmonizing rival ethnic communities. Though the odds are against it, and though luck and pa-tience are required in abundance, the plan might just work.

Beirut is the starting point for the "package deal." The city, once divided into Christian and Moslem halves, has been reunited. The Lebanese Army assures order. It is backed, but only that, by the multinational force of American, French, Italian and British units.

Though desolation abounds, reconstruction clearly prevails. The streets buzz with commercial activity. Every hour is rush hour. Rubble is going out. Basic services are coming back.

According to President Gemayel, who is very numerate, the administration, which was work-above 65 percent is due before the end of the year. The other day customs were reinstated at the port, with a big gain for the national

Just north of Beirut on the coast is the stronghold of Mr. Gemayel's own community, the Maronite Christians. Compared to his brother Bashir, Amin is a moderate in communal affairs. He is winding down the Christian militia, the better to build the regular army and to instill confidence among other ethnic groups. A giant step in that direction will come next month with the inception of military conscription.

Four other major parts of Lebanon still elude the presidential writ. The north coast of the country, centering around Tripoli, is occu-pied by forces of Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization, which are in conflict with each other. A Christian community, hostile to the Gemayel family, works with the Syrians. A community of orthodox, or Sunni, Moslems collaborates with the PLO.

South of Beirnt along the coast lies the old stomping ground of the PLO. Israeli forces now occupy the territory. The dominant local ethnie group in Lebanon, is a minority Moslem sect, the Shiites. The Shiites of southern Lebanon do not like either the Israelis or the Gemayel family.

Just back of Beirut, behind the presidential palace on Mount Lebanon, is an area known as the Chuf, which is home to another Moslem sect, the Druze Druze leaders believe the Christians are determined to wipe them out, and they have resisted both the Christian militia and the Lebanese Army in bitter fighting. To offset President Gemayel's influence, the Druze thirt with both the Syrians and the.

Behind the mountain range lies the Bekaa Valley, largely occupied by Syrian forces. Shirte Moslems make up an important part of the local community. At least some have been radicalized by fellow Shiites sent from the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Iran. The recent attacks on American, French and Italian soldiers are probably the work of Smite terrorists infiltrating into Beirut from the Bekaa.

President Gemayel's plan for reassembling all these bits and pieces depends on a deal with Israel. He and the United States are promising the Israelis that if they get out, there will be a sions will check the security. After a cooling off period, there would be a quiet thickening of diplomatic and commercial ties between Lebanon and Israel.

While no details have been worked out the hope is that the Syrians would withdraw jointly with the Israelis, bringing with them the PLO forces. With the Lebanese Army in control, and Beirut thriving, the different ethnic communities would have incentive to rally round

Mr. Gemayel.
Overwhelming odds go against the fitting together of all those pieces in a quick and smooth way. It is risky to try to move, on a rapid timetable, from one fixed deadline to another. Such an approach presents troublemakers the oppostunity to upset the whole applecant.

Just possible, though is a slow passing by almost imperceptible steps from one stage to another. For it is not as though there were any other candidates for the presidency, or any al-ternate framework for fitting together the him and pieces. On the contrary, if Mr. Gemayer and Lebanon did not exist, they would have to be invented.

Public Questions, Private Character

WASHINGTON — At a lunch the other day, Clare Booth Luce (to drop a name) was commenting on Ronald Reagan (to drop another one) and since the great was talking about the near-great or, at the very least, the famous, another thing you could hear drop was a pin. Mrs. Luce was talking about character. Say what you will about Ronald Reagan, she said, he's got it.

Now my friendship with Mrs. Luce, such as it is, goes back to the appetizer that preceded the lunch. and so I am not in any position to say what she knows about character. But I was inclined to agree with her. From time to time, I am impressed to the point of near-insanity with the character of Ronald Reagan

This happened just recently when Mr. Reagan, for a time, refused to fire Anne McGill Burford as administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, insisting, quite rightly, that no wrongdoing had been proved. Her crime, if that is the word, was in implementing his program. It would have been hard for the president to have fired her for that. That sort of stance is, as the English say, very ducky of the president. It is even duckier because everyone in Washington knew that Mrs. Burford was politically dead. Her ghost was seen leaving town about a week before she actually went, but her de-parture was a political, not a legal, necessity. Until absolutely necessary, the president refused to play politics with someone's career.

That, I think, is the sort of thing Mrs. Luce meant when she talked about character. The trouble is that it is a special kind of character, limited and somewhat personal, and it sometimes disappears when it comes in hroad public issues. The president's recent speech to the National Association of Evangelicals is a case in point. There, Mr. Reagan exhibited the character of an Elmer Gantry.

In that speech, the president injected God into the debate over the nuclear freeze. The deity has been all over the lot on this one, claimed by both proponents and opponents, but not until Mr. Reagan clarified matters were we told that favoring the freeze was the moral equivalent of "sin."

Gantry himself wnutd have hlushed. There are reasons aplenty to be opposed to the freeze - policy reasons, logical reasons, intellectual reasons — without aligning it to the

"struggle between right and wrong, 200d and evil." The president did not stop there, though. In the same speech, he brought up a rule he favors — the one that would require that parents of underage girls be notified if their

That, again, was demagoguery, as was the president's assertion that the people had not been heard from on this issue. In fact, they had — and in great numbers. Overwhelmingly, they registered opposition to the rule. It was the president who wanted it not Congress and not, judging from the mail, the people. The new rule, in fact, was written and implemented by precisely those "Washington-based bureaucrats" Mr. Reagan so loathes. This time, they were taking orders from him.

So what is to be made of this? Does it mean that the president lacks character - that Mrs. Luce is wrong? Only partially. Mr. Reagan does have a kind of character - hut it is a peronal one. It is the sort of add character that leads him to stand behind an Anne Burford until, really, there is no one to stand behind. But that is not the same as public character. The president's speech does not show good character. Lowering the level of public debate does not show good character. Standing behind your friends or being a really good guy is terrific. Private character is all well and good. But

Election Results in Finland Leave Social Democrats in Driver's Seat

By R.W. Apple Jr.

New York Times Service

HELSINKI — Complete returns in Finland's parliamentary elec-tions have made likely the continu-ation of a left-center government led by the Social Democrats, al-though it may take weeks to form a coalition because of the fragmented voting pattern.

The Social Democrats easily retained their position as Finland's largest party when an expected surge by the Conservatives failed develop in the voting Sunday and Monday.

Politicians said Tuesday morning that there appeared to be little chance that the Conservatives, who had hoped to share power for the first time since 1966, would be asked to join a coalition after barely holding their own.

It had been suggested before the voting by some opinion polls that the Conservatives might equal or even surpass the Social Democrats. That could have led to pressure for their inclusion in the government despite lingering suspicions that their participation might anger the neighboring Soviet Union.

But this country of five million people, where consensus politics is a way of life, instead followed its familiar pattern. With relatively few exceptions, Finland has been governed by a center-left coalition since 1937 - one of the most stable patterns of any Western Eu-

The Finnish Broadcasting Co. said, on the basis of a complete unofficial count, that the Social

It said the agrarian Center Party and Liberals together would have 38 seats, a loss of three, and the Communist-dominated Finnish People's Democratic League, 27, a loss of 8. It appeared that the present governing coalition, composed of the Social Democrats, the Swedish Party, and the Center Party, would thus have a small majority of 106 of the 200 seats, compared with 103 in the outgoing Parliament.

In the elections, a substantial bloc of protest votes went not to the Conservatives but to the Finnish Rural Party and to scattered candidates of the Green, or environmental, movement.

The Social Democrats registered small gains. Both the president, Mauno Koivisto, who was elected last year for a six-year term, and the outgoing prime minister, Kalevi Sorsa, are members of the party, which polled more than a quarter of the total vote.

Major setbacks were suffered by the People's Democratic League, whose largest component, the Communist Party, has been split into Stalinist and ann-Stalinist wings for years, and by the newly

Led by his son, Pekka Vennamo the Rural Party campaigned this year as the champion of "the forgotten people" of the provinces who have not shared in the recent industrial prosperity of Finland. It also capitalized on charges of corruption in the construction of the new Helsinki subway and other

Few Reminders of Wartime Horror Time Destroys Signs of Japanese Camp Where 3,000 Chinese Died

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service

HARBIN, China - No monuments survive to evoke the horror. Only a couple of small wooden plaques identify the site as the secret germ warfare factory of the Japanese Army's 731st Regiment.

The yellow hrick regimental headquarters has become a junior high school for the suburban Pingfang district of Harbin. Two skeleton chimneys that were camp furnaces rise silhouetted against the leaden winter sky above the surrounding peasant huts. The rest has been obliterated.

Yet here on the wheatlands of the Manchurian plain some of the worst atrocities of World War II were carried out in the name of medical research at a cost of more than 3,000 victims. Unlike the Nazis judged at Nuremberg, the Japanese torturers got away with their crimes. In the depth of winter, prisoners were plunged into cold water and then thrown outside, with selected limbs exposed or altogether naked, to freeze. Later they were dragged inside and their frozen flesh was pounded with boards or plunged into bot water to assess its sensitivity.

Others were injected with hubonic plague, cholera, syphilis and other diseases, and some were vivisected.

The camp began operation in 1940 on the southeastern outskirts of Harbin. Its mission was to develop biological weapons for use against Japan's enemies, including later the United States and its allies.

"At first, the experiments were carried out on the bodies of animals, but later they shifted to using people," according to Han Xiao. deputy director of the Pinglang district administrative office. "These were battlefield prisoners and civilians arrested by the Japanese, sometimes from other parts of the country. Normally, three prisoners would be experimented upon every two days." Mr. Han has spent 13 years learning what happened. Most of the 3,000 prisoners were Chinese, he said, but some Koreans were also taken to the camp along with captured Russians and Mongolians. The researchers wanted to compare the resistance of various nationalities and races to deadly germs.

There have been rumors that even some U.S. prisoners of war ended up there. But Mr. Han said the American prisoners brought to Manchuria were not used for experiments because the Japanese feared retaliation if the United States found out.

"The people who were tested were well fed and well housed because they wanted the best results from the experiments," Mr. Han said. "Some people were tested on several times until they died. They tested them, treated them and tested them again. Then they transported the bodies through a secret tunnel for cremation."

The experiments ranged beyond germ war-fare. Some prisoners bad their blood siphoned away and replaced with horse's blood to see if they could survive. Experimental poison gases were tested. Women were infected with syphilis.

After the prisoners died, parts of their dissected bodies were put on display to study the results. For comparison, vivisection was carried out on healthy prisoners, usually without anesthetics.

The Japanese research on biological warfare ended when the Soviet Army invaded Manchuria in August 1945. The Japanese gassed the remaining prisoners and blew up the camp to destroy the evidence before they

Lieutenant General Shiro Ishii, the commander, reportedly made a deal with the United States military occupation authorities through which he and his subordinates were given immunity from prosecution in return for handing over their research. He was reported to have died of natural causes in 1959. The Chinese government raised the case of the germ warfare center at Harbin last summer when it protested the rewriting of school textbooks in Japan to gloss over such Japa-nese brutality in World War II. Otherwise, it

The handwritten notes indicate the meeting was devoted to a discussion of state gubernatorial races last fall, with comments on specific candidates in need of special assistance. Most, but not all, of the can-

At a briefing Monday, Larry M. Speakes, the White House spokesman, said that to his knowledge no one had tried to manipulate the superfund.

Mr. Speakes said he had talked to Mr. Medas, who told him that Miss Lavelle had contacted him and "indicated she would like to stop by the White House and speak with him since they had mutual friends in California. He said both Mr. Medas and

Mr. Speakes also disclosed that Mr. Medas had again met with Miss Lavelle in January to discuss the situation in Times Beach, a small Missouri town contaminate

"That's the extent of my knowledge on the matter," said Mr. Speakes, adding: "I don't see anything improper, if that is indeed a correct account of the meeting." Miss Baldyga's notes, however, appear to indicate there was a state-hy-state discussion of last fall's gubernatorial elections, not just California politics. The notes, which Mr. Gore said had been taken while the meeting was in prog-

In the commission's view, a competent patient should be told of all pertinent circumstances and be allowed to decide. Similar decisions should be made by family members or others acting on behalf of mentally incompetent patients, it said, But the commission said the pracuces of medical institutions often place limits, sometimes inadvertently and inappropriately, on the ability of patients to choose. "Physicians and others commonly feel that it is acceptable to start a life-sustaining treatment, but find it completely unacceptable to stop the same treatment," said Morris B. Abram, a New York lawyer who heads the commission, which was established by President Jimmy Carter. Dr. Joanne Lynn, a physician who directed the study, said doctors were sometimes dissuaded from starting treatments because of the view that life-sustaining measures, once started, could not be stopped.

More important than historical comparisons, however, is what the government concedes has been a two-year stagnation in bving standards. Most Czechs and Western diplomats here say there has actually been a decline.

The regime used internal and hard-currency reserves that had been intended for social programs in order to cushion the impact of the worldwide energy and economic crisis of the mid-1970s, a government spokesman, Frantisek Kouril, said in a recent interview. Indeed it does. Nonetheless, these volcanic hills have become a bloody battleground be-tween the Salvadoran Army and the leftist guerrills forces, a conflict into which the United States has been increasingly drawn.

The two marines were arriving in San Salvador for U.S. Embassy guard duty. But the sight was reminiscent of an earlier experience, when maines in battle dress went ashore in March 1965, on the beaches just north of Danaug in ctuam. Those marines, too, were to be guards

-at the big U.S. air base there. Four-years later, there were 550,000 Ameriend; 57,939 had died there.

That enormous commitment began with a handful of military advisers, in the late 1950s. Recently, President Ronald Reagan said, "There is no parallel whatsoever with Victoam," and, "Only Salvadorans can light this war." President Lyndon B. Johnson in his 1964 ampaign complained that those urging escalaum of the Vietnam War were calling "upon us to supply American boys to do the job that Asi-22 boys should do."

Look of Another Place

The drive from the airport to the capital of San Salvador is in many ways reminiscent of Victuram: soudblocks manned by soldiers, tin-roofed shantytowns on the city's outskirts, hixurious homes for the well-to-do; billboards danbed with patriotic slogans - "The people and the armed forces together for the country - the riotous profusion of purple bougainvillea, pink hibiscus, scarlet jacaranda.

The U.S. Embassy in San Salvador, as that in Saigon was, is a grim concrete fortress.

A diplomat there complained the other day, "The Vietnam analogy is tearing at the guts of our policy here. Every time you try to do something here, you come up against it. Maybe it is a good thing that the president has provoked the debate, because one of the things we have to deal with in El Salvador is the specter of Viet-

The guerrilla forces here are not peasants in black pajamas; more often they are dressed in American-style blue jeans, and they listen to American rock music on transistor radios,

Further, with Vietnam as a precedent, senior American military men seem determined to keep a low profile here. So far they have sent only 37 "trainers" into the field, and they have a self-imposed limit of 55 men.

Dangers of Intervention

The trainers say that they wish wholeheartedly to avoid getting involved in combat operations with the Salvadorans. They seem to be fully aware of the dangers of intervening to the degree that they undermine the government ich was one of the major problems in Vietnam.

"I don't think we should turn this into a gringo war," said Colonel John D. Waghelstein, the head of the U.S. military training group here. He served two tours in Vietnam, the first as a Special Forces officer and the second with an airborne brigade.

The idea, he said, "is to train the Salvadoran Army: to advise, assist, and then let them get on

But Colonel Waghelstein admits that the 22,500 men of the Salvadoran armed forces have many of the same weaknesses the South Vietnamese soldiers had: ineffective leadership, lack of experienced noncommissioned officers, failure to specialize in small-unit actions, night patrols and quick-reaction attacks on enemy

U.S. military experts are aware that most of the Salvadoran Army works on a strict "9-to-5" schedule despite the guerrilla threat. "Yon've got to get your troops out into the bush looking for the gee's [guerrillas], and when you find 'em, you've got to be able to pile on," the colonel said.

Strategic Defensive

Like the South Vietnamese, the Salvadorans find themselves on the strategic defensive. The guerrillas select the time and place of attack and mount a superior force against an inferior government garrison or patrol.

To counter this, the U.S. military group has proposed a program that would enable U.S. advisers to train 350-man, quick-reaction battalions for each of the country's 14 provinces. These would be in addition to the larger battalions based in each province, units that are generally tied to guard duty at key installations. There also would be larger, 700-man battalions to act as a national reserve, which could be quickly deployed once the guerrilla forces were spotted or pinned down.

In all, the U.S. Military Advisory Group here wants the money to train about 5,000 more troops this year. A request for the money -$110 million for training and equipment — is heing debated by Congress.

According to U.S. military authorities, the guerrillas' strategy has been to break down the country's economy, which has been burt over the past three years by falling coffee, sugar and The guerrillas have concentrated in the northern mountains and eastern region, particularly across the Lempa River, an area they would like to isolate and declare a "liberated zone." To counter this strategy, the government has just devised a plan that closely resembles plans devised in Vietnam. It combines military and civic action in an effort to strengthen the government presence in the embattled eastern prov-This plan envisages first a military sweep of the provinces of San Vincente and Usulotán - security forces in the area. Behind this shield, a nine-agency government team would begin an extensive civic action program to bring electric power, water, public health services and schools into the area - and see that land reform is carried out.

As a military observer here put it, "The idea is to get the people to view the government as part of the solution — not part of the problem." ry before the U.S. Embassy was ready to anocunce its role in the plan, and again the specter of Vietnam appeared.

Comparisons were made with the Civil Operations and Revolutionary Development Support in Vietnam, the civic action plan that involved hundreds of American advisers, civilian and military, at the provincial and district level. line between civilian advisers and paramilitary action; it included the Phoenix program of assassinating Viet Cong.

It was suggested by some here that the nature of the Salvadoran plan would lead to the inased use of firepower in the villages, with the soldiers simply being unlikely to differentiate between guerrillas and peasants.

It was also suggested that the plan would in-volve an increased commitment of civilian U.S. trainers who would be closer in the lighting. Questions were raised about whether the omick-reaction battalions used to sweep the two target provinces would be tied down there, allowing the guerrillas to capture other villages farther to the oorth and east. Uotil now, the guerrillas have moved relative-ly freely over wide regions, even basing themselves on the slopes of Guazapa Volcano, only 15 miles (24 kilometers) north of the capital. Not long ago, the government launched an attack on the guerrilla-besieged town of Suchi-toto, spearheaded by the Atlacatl battalion, which was trained by U.S. military men and is considered the army's best. The battalion specializes in leaving its calling cards on the bodies of guerrilla dead.

Suchitoto, a collection of single-story, tile-roof shops and dwellings in faded pastel colors, is empty now, except for government soldiers loitering in the tiny central plaza.

Guerrilla graffiti is everywhere: "Death to the government" A Salvadoran officer said the guerrillas would probably return to Suchitoto as soon as the army pulled out, something that was common-place in Vietnam.

An Eerie Ride

The ride back from Suchitoto, like the drive up, is eerie. There are long stretches of absolute quiet on the road, and in Vietnam this was a sure sign of danger.

But the only soldiers encountered were men perhaps sometime this summer — to clear the of the Atlacall battalion, fresh camouflage area of enervillas and then station permanent cream on their faces, U.S.-made M-16 rifles

For 42 days, the guerrillas in the Guazapa Volcano area were accompanied by Don North, The Victnam plan sometimes drew only a hazy a free-lance journalist. He said: "Vietnam seems a lot clearer to me, now that I have seen how the civilians support the guerrillas and the guerrillas support the civilians. In Vietnam, we were never able to see the other side.

Like the Viet Cong, Mr. North said, El Salvador's guerrillas have a political cadre whose job is to live among the people and preach the message of insurgency.

He said that coordination among the various guerrilla groups was time-consuming that it slowed their advances considerably. However, the guerrillas are confident of winning, he said, adding that if the United States comes in heavily, the war could become a regional one.

Boy in a Cave

The strongest impression be brought away with him, Mr. North said, was of a young boy named Ricardo buddled in a cave during a government bombing attack.
"What hit me," he said, "was that the cost of a 500-pound bomb from the United States could feed Ricardo and his whole village for

In their most recent success, the guerrillas oc-cupied for four days the town of Berlin in the middle of Usulutan province, while the main army reaction forces were fighting in the northernmost province, Morazán.

will have a good bit to say about whether El Salvador gets further aid from Washington. As in Victnam, the visitor had the strong impression that the villagers of Berlin had oo great love for either side. They wanted to be left in peace to get on with their lives.

If the war is oot going well in the countryside. the government in San Salvador has major problems, too, with the pobocians about in embark on a presidential election campaign to choose a successor in the provisional president, Alvaro Magaña. The election is to be held by the end of the year, at U.S. insistence.

There are strong rumors that Mr. Garcia, the defense minister, will be forced to resign and that this will be followed by a shakeup in the army officer corps.

Fears of Carnage

After the election a year ago for a constituent assembly, the assembly president, Roberto d'Aubuisson, a rightist, was widely feared to be in a posicion to thwart the land reform and buman rights programs being pushed by the United States here as they were in Vietnam. Mr. D'Aubnisson was accused by former U.S. Ambassador Robert E. White of being responsible for the assassination three years ago of Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero. There were fears that if Mr. d'Aubuisson should become a strong candidate for president, the death squads would be active, with carnage in the cioes and in the countryside. As a condition of certifying foreign aid for El Salvador, the U.S. Congress has insisted that land reform be carried out and that the government clean up its human rights record by clamping down on the death squads, which have killed thousands of Salvadorans in the past few years. But some Salvadoran liberals fear that because of the strong commitment to the government expressed by the Reagan administration, the right will think it can ignore the land reform program, as well as the promise in end the kill-

"Reagan seems to be giving this government an open-ended commitment, no matter what he says about supporting land reform and human rights," said a leading Salvadoran social scientist, who did not want to be identified.

"There is oo way this country can escape the involvement of the United States in its internal political affairs. But since this can't be avoided, one had hoped that the United States could

Rex Harrison Returns Triumphant

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribune

T ONDON - In the 10 years or so since Sir Laurence Olivier gave up the National Theatre and most other great stars gave up the West End, we have grown accustomed - for better or often for worse - to an essentially academic theater where the writers and directors reign unchallenged. Faced with a Shaw revival such as that of "Heartbreak House," now at the Theatre Royal Haymarket, my critical colleagues therefore look instinctively to see what the director rather than the actors have brought to it. As a result, John Dexter's new production has been unfairly attacked for lacking the ensemble coherence of

B recent National revival by John Schlesinger. But this is to deny not only the flamboyant and quirky theatricality of what Dexter has produced, a theatricality that Shaw would have been among the first to recognize and grudging-ly approve; it is also to deny the remarkable achievement of the new production in bringing Rex Harrison back into his own. Twenty-five years on from "My Fair Lady," years which he has spent working in a fair amount of old rubbish, Harrison is B1 last home in his rightful-Shavian territory. Yet all of that is a perfect role description of Sbotover himself, and when Harrison gets himself into the great speech about England — "The captain is in his bunk, drinking bottled ditchwater; and the crew is gambling in the forecastle. She will strike and sink and split. Around Harrison in this rambling structure, apparently run up by an unholy alliance of Ben Travers and Turgenev, Dexter has assembled one of the starriest casts even the Haymarket has recently enjoyed: Diana Rigg, looking like Lady Ottoline Morrell, is Hesione, Rosemary Harris is an aristocratie Ariadne, Paxton White head as Hector is back after 20 years in Canada and still sounding uncannily like Jonathan Miller, Simon Ward as a twit-of-the-year Randall Utterword, and the indomitable Doris Hare as the aptly-named Nurse Guinness. A wonderfully irrelevant Englishness pervades Roger Redfam's production (superbly choreographed by Tudor Davies and Kenn Old-field) and, despite being set in a mythical country where the natives seem to spend most of their time fondling very small boys, this is a production that will run for as long as coaches have parties, not least because of Gordon's massive ability to spread her own patent enjoyment through the auditorium.

New Tosco Executive in London Stresses Energy Research Need

Jean Paul Legrand

Jean Paul Legrand, recently ap-pointed a senior vice president of Tosco Corp., says falling oil prices do not lessen the need for his company's efforts to develop expensive new forms of energy.

"During surpluses we should be looking to times of shortages," he said. "One day there will be a requirement for synthetic oil."

Mr. Legrand heads Tosco's re-gional office for Europe, Africa and the Middle East, which is moving to London from Paris. Tosco is one of the largest inde-pendent U.S. refiners and is a producer of crude oil chiefly by the application of enhanced recovery techniques. The Los Angeles-based company also develops and li-censes technologies to produce oil, gas and by-products from oil shale, coal and other solid bydrocarbons. With its recent acquisition of AZL Resources, Tosco has gained an equity position in International Energy Development Corp. — a Geneva and London-based company that deals with energy development in the Third World — and ownership of Credit Immobilier of Geneva. Tosco also is expanding its petroleum trading in Europe, Mr. Legrand said.

Mr. Legrand joined Tosco in 1974 as manager of the Paris and London offices and was made a vice president in 1980. Before joining Tosco, be spent six years as an independent oil consultant. His experience in the international oil market also includes nine years as a negotiator with Elf Aquitaine and 10 years with Shell International, From 1948 to 1952 Mr. Legrand was secretary of the oil committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation, now OECD. He is Frenchborn and bolds a degree in engineering from the University of Paris as well as a degree in economics from Cambridge University.

discusses the 8380 disk drive with Robert Ganter, program manager of the product. Storage Technology Pins Hope

For Future on New Disk Drive By Thomas C. Haves

New York Times Service LOUISVILLE Colorado — Storage Technology usually has proved itself lithe and resourceful, dancing in the shadow of the computer industry giant. International Business Machines.

But the company took a nasty fall last year when a bad batch of disk drives caused computer system failures at several large corporations. The $17-million bill to remedy the situation contributed to Storage Technology's first drop in an-nual profit since 1974. They had grown at an average yearly rate of more than 40 percent for the last

Perhaps worse, though, was the damage to the company's reputation for sound engineering at an especially portentous time.

Storage Technology is about to begin shipping its new thin-film disk drive, the $380, nearly 10 months after IBM established a lead with its 3380. The $330 is a glamour entry among a balf-dozen new products on the way — products that Jesse I. Aweida, chairman and chief executive, is counting on to contribute about another $1 hillion in sales at Storage Technology in 1985.

That is a tall order, considering that the company passed $1 billion in total revenue — at $1.1 billion, a 17-percent gain over 1981 — for the first time last year. Net income, at $64.7 million, or $1.88 a share, dropped 21 percent. With customer demand still tepid, the company said on March 14 that it was laying off 500 of its 8,100 workers in Colorado, mainly in its administrative staff.

Yet analysts expect the market for thin-film disk drives to exceed S5 billion in two years, up from S2 billion this year. If its 8380 catches on this spring. Storage Technology could capture 20 percent of the thin-film disk business by 1984 and 25 percent by 1985, according to Stephen T, McClellan, a technology analyst with Salomon Brothers.

He wrote in a recent report that the 8380 is smaller, faster and easier to manufacture than the 3380 that IBM began to ship late in 1981. If he is right. Mr. Aweida's sales projection may turn out to be conservative.

At the moment, bowever, many customers and analysts have adopted a cautious attitude. "We're giving it a cool reception because we want somebody else to work the buss out," a computer systems manager in a major aerospace company said.
It does not matter that Storage Technology con-

WASHINGTON — New orders received by U.S. manufacturers for durable goods fell 4 percent in February, the Commerce Department said Tuesday. The decline came after three consecutive monthly increas-

Analysts said that the figures, much lower than expected, suggest the economy is not recovering as strongly as recent bousing starts and other figures have implied.

Durable goods are long lasting, expensive items such as automobiles and major household appliances that consumers buy and machinery that industry buys. Orders to factories to produce them are an important indicator of future production and employment in manufacturing indus-tries. A weaker recovery would give the Federal Reserve less leeway to raise interest rates in an effort to stem rapid money growth, analysts said.

A survey by Money Market Services showed a median forecast of a 0.3 percent increase in February durable goods orders.

IMF May Borrow $9 Billion In Private Funds, Study Says

NEW YORK (UPI) — The International Monetary Fund may be forced to borrow as much as $9 billion from private financial markets because of heavy demands oo its resources, according to a study by the Group of Thirty released Tuesday.

"After allowing for undrawn commitments [by the IMF] of roughly $17.7 billion, including assistance arranged recently for Mexico, Argentina, Chile, and Brazil, the IMF can count on only about $9 billion being available for oew lending," the study said.

It noted that the agreement reached in Washington in February to increase the IMF's resources oeeds the approval of IMF member countries, as well as the U.S. Congress and that cannot be taken for granted.

"Even if forthcoming [the approval] would not make new resources available to the IMF before the end of 1983 at the earliest," the study narrative historian to historical novelist may seem easy, but it is not, and Brown only partly succeeds in making that switch in "Killdeer Mountain."

A narrative historian may structure his materials so that they create a plot, but his basic story is giv-en to him by history. A novelist, even a historical novelist, must cre-ate both his story and his plot, and the story should be pleasing, the plot significant. Brown's story may en to him by history. A novelist, even a historical novelist must create both his story and his plot, and the story should be pleasing, the plot significant. Brown's story may please those readers who like mystery and adventure, but the significance of his plot is obscure.

In "Killdeer Mountain," as in it is not a good novel.

"Creek Mary's Blood," Brown's narrator is a newspaper reporter al-

the things that a stowaway whom he has hidden in his cabin might well be Rawley, or might be an impersonator of him.

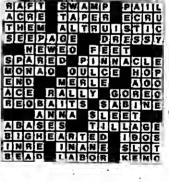

I was faintly reminded of Melville's "The Confidence Man," but in "Killdeer Mountain" all the mystification bears little philosophical or psychological fruit. At the outset of his story, Sam Morrison masses that "the world we view is a complex mirror that tricks us with false images," but any profundity latent in that idea is not realized in the story, and one is measily aware of Dee Brown rather than the world holding up the mirror. The whole thing seems to be mystification's sake—or for the sake of a good story without the significance of a good plot.

Brown is at his best narrating adventurous episodes within the novel — the skirmish in which the real Major Rawley may or may not have been killed, the full-scale bai-real Major Rawley may or may not have been killed, the full-scale batle between soldiers and Indi Killdeer Mountain, or the raid into Canada during a raging blizzard. Much of Brown's nonfiction describes military campaigns in circumstantial detail, and in this novel he draws on skills he has developed as a narrative historian.

But most readers want vivid characters in novels as well as vivid narration, and here again Brown has only limited success, partly because he has not mastered an art unnecessary to the historian but

Solution to Previous Puzzle

DEE Brown is prolific. Twenty-crucial to the novelist—the art of two previous books are list-dialogue. Brown's dialogue is artified at the front of "Killdeer Mouncial; it flattens his characters rather than vivifying them.

Can Computers Make Better Days at the Races?

By Andrew Bever Washington Post Service

ARCADIA. California - Can a computer beat the races? Increasing numbers of horseplayers are asking just that whether modern technology can solve a riddle that has haffled men for coatories. And increasing numpers of computer experts are taking in interest in the track, thinking it may be a fertile area to apply their

It is doubtful that many of them will be able to use a computer to make a steady profit at the track. But the new technology will almost ertainly alter and streamline the vey handicappers approach the

The pioneer of the computer era ilandicapping was William Quiin, a mathematics professor at Adelphi University. Quirin fed lata from thousands of races toto a computer and then asked it all the undamental questions: How important is a recent race? How imcortant is a drop in claiming price? How important is early speed?

Quirin found the mathematical imbabilities for thousands of diferent handicapping situations and as published his results to "Wioting at the Races: Computer Disoveries in Thoroughbred Handiapping." The book has become ho bible for the new generation of computer handicappers.

Computers, said Dick Mitchell, t Los Angeles mathematician, "are in adjunct to the intellectual proxss. They are to a handicapper what a word processor is to a writ-T." And many horseplayers are usng them ingeniously.

In Omaha, George Kaywood has rogrammed a computer to comsile speed figures at his hometown rack, Ak-Sar-Ben. In New York, neve Scharff bas programmed a tocket-sized calculator to analyze he pace of races with a method too ophisticated for pencil-and-paper alculation. But the most producive use of computers may be to judy the performances and methds of trainers.

At Santa Anita recently, a young an named Eric Goldreich asked I'd like to see some of the trainer esearch he'd done. The next day, e came to the track lugging a ook of computer printouts about tree feet wide and about 300 pag-thick. It looked, I thought, like a impressive analysis of all the 'est Coast trainers. "Richard fandella," read the label on th over. "I've got 45 more books like is at home," Goldreich said.

That might surprise and weight races (his specialty) and his record with first-time starters entered for a claiming price (dismal) — he knew everything about the trainer. But the drawback was obvious. Goldreich didn't have time to do ouch more than program data into his computer, he didn't even have time to handicap or get to the track often. Because computer-oriented handicappers bave to generate their own information, they commonly become slaves to their work. But the day will probably come when such information is widely available. "How would you like to sit in front of your terminal." Quirin asked, "and type in the name of a horse and get your speed figures, trip notes, information on his physical appearance, data on his jockey and trainer? That should be possible - hut it would take an organization. f think eventually we're going to see a network of some sort that will form a massive data base and let private subscribers tap into found was that the importance of the track and handicapping.

Yet to some people, even such an amhitious use of computers scems relatively tame. If computers can be programmed to master chess, bridge and backgammon, to put men on the moon, why can't they create a system that will produce a consistent profit at the

There are many people using computers to answer that one, and they tend to approach the quest in fundamentally the same way. They feed into the computer as many quantifiable bits of information about borses as they can, and then ask the computer to weigh those factors in the way that will produce the optimal results.

"The equation might be 10 percent for receney, 5 percent for the jockey, 10 percent for the trainer, 10 percent for early pace and then

Gerulaitis Cleared in Drug Case

NEW YORK (AP) — Tennis professional Vitas Gerulaitis has been cleared by a federal grand jury of criminal wrongdoing in connection with allegations that he agreed to buy cocaine, it was disclosed Tuesday. U.S. Attorney John S. Martin Jr. said the grand jury had filed a "no true bill" in connection with a veariong investigation. Martin said the grand jury "found a lack of sufficient evidence to bring criminal charges" against Gerulaitis with respect to allegations involving a cocaine transaction engaged in by Tony Goble. The judge said the investigation had been terminated as a result of the grand jury's action.

Goble was convicted last fall of conspiring to huy synthetic cocaine being offered by federal undercover agents. Testimony was introduced at his trial indicating that Goble told the agents that Gerulaitis was willing to put up $20,000 for a sbare of the cocaine Goble intended to huy. Goble was sentenced to a year in prison at proceedings conducted in January by U.S. District Judge Kevin Thomas Duffy.

A Movable Job Action

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK - News item: When the end of a two-week strike by picadors and handerilleros finally restored labor peace to Spanish bullfight arenas this week, a Madrid newspaper reported "a sensation of relief in taurine circles." Others were not so sure. "Bullfighting." one matador said, "has lost a lot of its luster."

The sun rose in the east that spring and we fished the good, cold stream that fed into the Ehro and afterwards we sat hy the fire and ate the good fish and I told Daughter about Hannibal.

"Hannibal was bad, but his elephants were good, and when they crossed the Ehro it was good to see." f said.

Aod when the elephants passed, swinging their line proboscises, you could feel the earth move. You have told me that many times, and it was good to hear, but now I have heard it enough."

"I am sorry I said 'proboscises,' Papa," she said, "I will oot say it again if you will take me to Pamplons to see the job action. Afterwards you can tell me of the great Hannibal and the flanking movement by which he won the Battle of Cannae, and I will not look bored."

I saw it would be had with Daughter at Pamplona. At the hotel we drank the bad wine from the good goatskins, but she did oot smile the good smile of the aficionado when I told her about "the running of the tourists."

"You mean to tell me that all us tourists have to run up that narrow street while picadors on horseback chase us with those pointed sticks?" she asked. "Not for me, Pops. No way am I going to risk losing my Guccis io that

"Niece is brave, Daughter. She would not fear the loss of a few them while supplies in front of the shoes while running in froot of the picadors. She would enjoy the subthe beauty of the placardaros shouting "Scabarero!" at the matadors crossing the picket line."

"What are the placardaros, Papa?"

Couple Makes Toronto a Czech Literary Center

By Alan Levy

International Herald Tribune TORONTO - Josef Skyorecky wrote a novel in 1948 that wasn't published until 1958 — and then it lasted two months, denounced as "wormy fruit" and a "mangy pussycat" of revisionism, withdrawn and hanned. The Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia on Aug. 21, 1968, generated no new gulags or exe-cutions, but meant cultural death to writers like Skyorecky. "When a hig power wants to deprive a small country of its oational consciousness, it uses the method of organized forgetting," as another Czech emigre novelist, Milan Kuodera, puls it. "Contemporary Czech literature, iosofar as it has any value at all has not been printed for [more than a dozen] years; 200 Czech writers have been proscribed, including the dead Franz Kafka; 145 Czech historians have been dismissed from their posts, history has been rewritten, monuments demol-ished. A nation which loses awareness of its past gradually loses its self." But Skyorecky's oovel "The Cowards" is oow a Penguin Mod-ern Classic; io 1980, he woo the biennial Neustadt International Prize for Literature (a stepping stone to the Nobel for Czesław Milosz and Gabriel Garcia Marquez). Graham Greene, who reads him in French, has compared Skyorecky's storytelling to Chekhov, Joyce and James.

Skvorecky's wife, Zdena Salivarova, 49, a notable actress of the 1960s Czech film renaissance (she played in Jan Nemec's allogorical "Report on the Party and the Guests") is a covelist in her own right ("Summer in Prague," Harper & Row, 1975).

Their only children are 135 books issued in Czech by their publishing house. 68 Publishers Toronto, which is really Salivarova's creation. Before the 1968 clampdown, Skyorecky, 58, who spoke fluent English and had anucipated the worst, woo an appointment as writer-in-residence at the University of Toronto, where he now teaches American literature and film history. But offeriog the book and asking for more names. By the time her literature and film history. But printing of 2,000 copies was off by emigres. By then, Salivarova his wife came to Canada language-less, a silent, slightly sulleo shadow io the verbal glitter gen-erated by her gifted husband at faculty gatherings.

In Toronto io 1969, Skyorecky gave his wife all his savings "to take a dental assistant's course or one of those other schemes that were advertised in the paper; anything to get Zdena working instead of moping around the house being homesick."

Salivarova remembered that "the only times my family had money — between the had times - was from books." Her father had been jailed by both Nazis and the Stalinists for being a hookseller and occasional publishing cotrepreneur. She decided to use the money to publish her husband's second oovel, "The Tank Corps," whose publication in Prague had just been canceled. (It was written in 1954.)

The book was set in type at a Polish print shop on an ancient linotype machine during the printer's spare time. Between proofs, Salivarova rummaged through her husband's address book for cootacts in the emigré colonies of the United States, Australia, Austria, Switzerland, West Germany, Britain and Can-ada. There are oearly 50,000 Czechs and Slovaks in Torooto alone Salivarova wrote to 300.

the presses, she had 1,000 names and oearly twice as many orders.

The Skyoreckys had discovered their merchandising secret. Czech immigrants of the class of 1938 (refugees from Hitler) and 1948 ffrom the Communist takeover) could now revisit Czechoslovakia as tourists; they would order one copy for themselves plus another to smuggle back into the old country. The books were marketed in handsome paperback, durably bound — since each book that gets into Czechoslovakia has an estimated 150 readers. One copy sold for the equivalent of $6 in the West, but two sold for only $8 — and in the second was a reply card asking the buyer to say, without too much detail,

So the Skyoreckys know that 200 to 250 copies of every book they have published are safely in-side Czechoslovakin, enabling writers like Kundera, Arnost Lustig and Jan Benes oot only to cootinue writing to their mother tongue, but to be read in Czechoslovakia (Other emigre Czechlanguage publishers include In-dex in Cologne, at least four oth-ers in West Germany, two in Switzerland and one in England, but their combined output does not equal 6g's).

how he or she disposed of it.

Even when confiscated at Czech border crossings, 68's books are read by customs officers before being locked up as evidence, according to travelers who have been detained, deported, or just lectured for having them. In Czechoslovakia, ooc woman lost her job for reading a 68 publication and a schoolteacher who was sent one in the mail as a gift was summoned to a police station for questioning.

Random imports by tourists proved inadequate for the Czech thirst for good literature, so book smugglers materialized. Czechoslovak police last year seized a car with two Frenchmen and hundreds of outlawed books, many of them issued by 68. About 50 people were arrested as had 6,000 addresses plus a slipped disc from dragging mail-hags to the post office, but she was also fluent in English, having mastered the language occided to obtain an export license or deal with a trade commissioner.

In the early 1970s, the couple flirted with the idea of fulfilling a second missioo: keeping banned suthors still living in Czechoslovakia in print by publishing their manuscripts. "We were afraid to ask them to risk publishing with us." Skyorecky recalls, "until we found out that we were more afraid for them than they were for themselves." Works by Ludvik Vaculik and the jailed Vaclav Havel were added to the 68 list.

The couple have another cam-paign. "We create writers," says Salivarova. "Young exiles who started writing in Czech because we inspired them." Two of these are Jan Novak, whose play "Bohemian Heaven" has been produced in Greenwich Village, and Ota Ulc, teaching at the State University of New York in Bingmain small (from 1,000 for poet-ry; 5,000 for a Skvorecky, Kun-dera or Vaculik novel, which cost from $7,500 to $10,000 to print). Thanks to the pre-selling, a sea-son of 15 books is planned ahead, instead of one edition at a time.

Most of the profits are plowed back ioro the husiness, which re-cently moved out of the two-story Cabbagetown row house the Skvoreckys bought in 1973. At headquarters at No. 112 on fashionable Avenue Road, the books are now printed with computer-ized phototypesetting machines, programmed in Czech, English, and Canadian French, Two doors up Avenue Road is Salivarova's latest enterprise: a printing business that does contract work in Italian, German, Hungarian, French, Danish, Serbian, Russian and Polish, as well as in Czech and English. Salivarova has hardly had a chance to write. Next year, however. Skyorecky plans to change that by taking over the print em-pire for his wife during his summer recess. "The last opportunity she had to write," he says, "was during a postal strike. She pro-duced a novella in three days." PEOPLE
